

Damico Contracting is a family-owned business that spans three generations for over fifty years. They offer a new perspective on construction that is innovative, fun, clever, and creative. The time had come for a new office space indicative of where the company is headed.

Patrick Thompson Design wanted the new Damico office to showcase the level of craftsmanship and detail provided to their clients. As a result, many exterior materials are used as interior surfaces. Commercial windows, wood siding, and steel trusses all have a place in this build-out.

The furniture and lighting both have nods to modern aesthetics but were selected and designed to withstand the rugged wear and tear of daily use within the space. Bold colors, like construction orange and the bright blue of the Damico logo, were used to create contrast with natural building materials. A custom wall graphic honors the residential roots that started the company years ago.

Reminiscent of an old shop, PTD hired local sign painter legend, Kelly Golden, to hand paint the doors and windows with her custom-designed graphics. Real construction safety signage and some inside jokes were the perfect balance for this construction company's home and are representative of their attitudes and company culture.

Damico Contracting is very proud of the company their family has built, the team they have developed, and their vision for the future. PTD is thrilled to have played a part in creating an office space that portrays this pride and also meets their business needs for the years ahead.
